Constitutional Values in the 21st Century

Constitution is the fundamental document of a country which contains the ethos and values of the society. All the norms and legal framework Of the country are set out as per the constitutional law. Legislature, Executive and Judiciary are the principal organs for the good governance of the country. Apart from the organs, the constitution may provide for the creation of other organs or institution for the enrichment of the relationship between individual and the state. Such governmental organs are not sovereign; derive their power from the constitution. They derive their authority and discharge their responsibilities within the norms of the constitution. Thus the validity of the law and authority are tested in the touchstone of the constitution. The Indian constitution vested power on the judiciary to declare a law unconstitutional if it is contravening the constitutional parameters.

We the people of India' stock taken a vow to create an egalitarian Society of high order where justice, equality, liberty and fraternity shall Prevail. After seven decade of our self governance, we have achieved a lot yet many things have remained untouched. The founding fathers of Our constitution had a dream to create a nation of transcendental Order. 'Sarve Bhabantu Sukhinah, Sarve Santu Niramaya mantra has Inspitred them to fight for justice, truth and peace. They followed the principle of non violence to achieve the value based life. In the 21st Century the seminarian must dwell, what should be the foot print that will generate common consensus to uphold our constitutional values. The Values those are humanitarian, universal and free from all dogmas and bias.

In the 21st century, we have many challenges. Thus there is high need to acclimatise our people with vast social change without defacing our constitutional spirit and characters. We have impressive economic growth and progressive legislations. These growths have been well reflected in the verdicts of the courts. There is high time always to resolve some issues with top priority. Progressive people can think and find the fact for transforming the goal.
